

Descriptive Creative Essay: “Niagara Falls”

It is a common knowledge that people may feel special emotions about particular places. For instance, someone, looking for inspiration, goes to an empty beach, or a person, who needs to make an important decision, climbs a high mountain in order to be alone and contemplate over a problem. Photographers take dangerous trips in order to make exclusive pictures of perfect nature or outstanding buildings, poets dedicate their best works to the beauty of the environment. People are prone to remember the places which impressed them for some reason. The place that takes the special position in my mind is Niagara Falls, the place, where water lives.

The feeling of being so tiny in a big, even huge, world appears in the head when looking on something as ultimate as waterfall. Water, even in still position, captivates the sight and amazes with its pure perfection. It is not a surprise why people are so attached to water, as it is a constituent part of our organisms. Long time ago, people would always build their homes not far from water as they were absolutely dependent on it. Nowadays, we have taps in every house and apartments, but they did not make our bodies less subjected to water.

It is interesting to observe how people drink water. Someone may gulp it with wild thirst, when another will savour every drop. Someone can be very picky to the quality and cleanness of it, while others do not pay special attention. People do have their own attitude towards water, which is based on particular factors. However, everyone takes into consideration the fact that without it we are bound to die.

Nevertheless, we all also understand and absorb the danger factor that water conceals. It took so many lives, so many hopes, so many days. Being unpredictable and changeable, water can express so many feelings. Anxiety, tranquility, haste, bitterness, peace, indifference...What does a waterfall express? From my perspective, different people read different emotions in it. Someone may think that waterfall is extremely dangerous and emits agitation, when another person sees steadiness in straight direction of the falling water and completeness when it reaches the end.

People see things from their personal prism. From my viewpoint, waterfall is a phenomenon that represents our life in its cyclic character. The process when water reaches the very top of the fall is parallel to a person's birth. Then, that someone is living his or her life always being in a hurry as water is extremely fast when falling. In the very end, he or she understands that it is over, and a little hurricane pierces the soul, like every waterfall that boils on the bottom. New people are born - new water is on the very beginning of the extraordinary but fatal journey.

Sometimes, people are so busy that they do not pay attention to details. The problem is that we cannot find that balance between financial and inner wealth. Being engaged into work, we do not even understand what exactly we are missing. Very often, at this point a person resorts to nature, which is not a wrong step. Proceeding with the idea of feeling miserable near a waterfall, it is worth saying that being human means underestimating spiritual recourses nature can supply us with. For instance, when I observe the perfection of nature I subconsciously become calm comparing my problems to universe. They seem to be so little and insignificant. A person of any gender, race, nationality and intellectual development longs for union with nature, being its part from the birth.

Niagara Falls is the place where you feel inspired. The sound water makes can be a thousand of voices speaking in all possible and impossible languages. You just need to learn to hear what they are trying to say. The colour of water changes with the mood shifts. Water can breathe, move and feel there. If you need to make a solution- go to Niagara Falls, if you want to relax and take your time in solitude – go to Niagara Falls, if you are up to visit an unbelievable place, picture of which will last in your memory forever – just go to Niagara Falls.
